SUBJECT: BrightFutures International Logistics Strategy

BrightFutures is currently facing several logistical challenges following its global expansion. These include high costs to ship, delayed deliveries, and damaged products, leading to a decrease in customer satisfaction. Currently, the company primarily uses air freight for international shipping and trucks for domestic and final mile delivery. Although air freight is fast, it has significantly increased the company's shipping costs, decreasing profitability. To ensure customer satisfaction and maintain cost-effectiveness, BrightFutures must adopt an improved logistics strategy.

Upon the seasonal catalogue refresh, demand for the new BrightFutures products is immediate. As such, the newly introduced products must make their way to the international market right away. For the first two weeks after the catalogue launch, BrightFutures should send orders via air freight. This ensures new products gets into the hands of customers as soon as possible.

International demand for BrightFutures products is relatively predictable, at 750kg of product each week. Simultaneous to the launch, BrightFutures should also send 1,500kg (two weeks) of product via ocean freight. Cargo ships from New York will take approximately two weeks to reach Europe. Air freight serves customer needs in the time it takes ocean freighters to reach Europe.

Air and ocean freight is handled through The Port of Hamburg in Germany. Upon arrival, cargo is kept in the BrightFutures Hamburg warehouse. As orders from the European market come in, trucks are dispatched from the warehouse for final mile delivery.

An individual ocean freighter will carry no more than two weeks (1,500kg) of BrightFutures product. This keeps warehouse costs down, as less product needs to be stored. Using this hybrid model, air freight is only necessary eight weeks of the year, after the seasonal catalogue refresh. For the other forty-four weeks, ocean freight is the primary transatlantic method of transport.

BrightFutures current model of air freight costs $195,000. Utilizing our hybrid strategy, transatlantic combined freight costs $79,500. Final mile delivery is fixed at $58,500, as is the existing Hamburg warehouse, at $20,000. This means the current model costs BrightFutures $273,500, and the hybrid model would cost $158,000.

Model	Air Freight	Ocean Freight	Ground Freight	Warehouse	Totals
Current	$ 195,000.00	$ -	$ 58,500.00	$ 20,000.00	$ 273,500.00
Proposed	$ 30,000.00	$ 49,500.00	$ 58,500.00	$ 20,000.00	$ 158,000.00

To conclude, the adoption of our hybrid logistics strategy can significantly reduce BrightFutures' shipping costs and maintain customer satisfaction. Using air freight during the first two weeks of the new catalogue will ensure prompt delivery, while ocean freight will cut down on shipping costs. This approach will cut the annual expense of logistics by nearly 45%. We advise the adoption of this model so BrightFutures can significantly reduce shipping costs while ensuring prompt delivery and satisfied customers.

Keep it Relevant

How has this changed over time?

- It is getting worse: new chemical exposures, mental health and drug use.
- Since 2008, the healthcare system has shifted away from rural areas, intensifying existing health issues for residents
- From 2013 to 2020, over 100 rural hospitals closed in the US. As a result, residents must travel significantly farther for both routine and specialized medical services.
- But some improvements in certain areas are being made as well.....
